Subject: My Resignation: It's Not You, It's Me

Dear [Recipient's Name],

After much thought (and way too much coffee), I have decided it's time for me to hang up my [Your Position] hat and embark on a new adventure. My last day at [Company Name] will be [Last Working Day].

This decision wasn't easy. I mean, where else will I find coworkers who tolerate my bad jokes, meetings that run on caffeine, and a boss who miraculously manages to stay calm during deadlines? But alas, even the best sitcoms eventually have their season finales.

While I'm excited about what's next (spoiler: probably lots of naps and fewer spreadsheets), I'll miss the people, the projects, and the countless times we've tried to make the printer work. It's been an unforgettable ride, and I'm leaving with a heart full of gratitude and maybe a bit of regret about all the donuts I didn't eat in the break room.

I'll do my best to make this transition smooth and ensure that my tasks are wrapped up nicely—like a burrito, but with fewer carbs. Please let me know how I can help before I officially pass the torch.

Thank you for the laughs, the learning, and the memories. I promise not to steal all the pens on my way out.

Warm regards (and maybe a few chuckles),
[Your Name]
